

Does your job make you sexy?

JOYANNE PURSAGA

Sun Media

WINNIPEG — It pays the rent, but does it heat up your love life?

Apparently your job can affect your sexual appeal, according to a new survey from FastLife.ca, a speed dating and singles service.

FastLife asked 400 of its male and female members whether 20 common professions were "sexy" to the opposite sex.

When it comes to male sexiness, it appears sports stars can play the field in more ways than one.

"I suppose a female would take some form of enjoyment with football guys being in tight pants."

— Winnipeg Blue Bomber kicker
Troy Westwood

A full 78% of women rated male athletes sexy, followed by firemen with a 75% attraction approval rate.

But not even those deemed most alluring agreed entirely with the results.

"I kind of have mixed feelings about that," said Winnipeg Blue Bomber kicker Troy Westwood. "If they saw professional athletes in the showers, I can promise you the discrepancy between the sexy and non-sexy is quite large."

Westwood believes uniforms may be partly to credit for the athletic attraction.

"I suppose a female would take some form of enjoyment with football guys being in tight pants. And one of the benefits of being a professional athlete is you're probably in pretty good shape, which would help make you sexy," said Westwood.

Firemen secured second place, indicating what a man wears does matter.

On the flip side, every man surveyed said female models are sexy and 96% found dancers hot. On the opposite end of the spectrum, women builders were voted sexy by only 15% of men and male politicians appealed to just 14% of women.